Anton Edesky Knocked Down and Dragged Along the Track.

Lay Bleeding and Conscience While Trains Rotted Over Him.

Must Have Climbed the Pillars to Get Upon the Structure.

Anton Edesky, a Russian, forty-eight years old, of 150 East 14th street, was found just after midnight lying on the tracks of the Elevated road which runs through Pearl street, midway between the Franklin Square and Fulton street stations. He is now lying in a dying condition in Chambers Street Hospital.

From his appearance when found, the man had evidently been dragged for more than 100 yards along the track, by an engine. How he got on the structure, and how long he lay there before being seen, may never be known, unless he recovers sufficiently to explain.

There is a third avenue train which leaves South Ferry at midnight, bound westward. When this train got a block above the Fulton street station this morning, the engineer, looking along the tracks, saw in the dim light the body of the man lying on the structure in the center, between the tracks. The engineer had scarcely caught sight of the body before the entire train had passed it.

Two blocks further along, at the Franklin square station, the engineer noticed the man lying on the track, and as soon as he could he stopped the train and ran back to the station where the accident had occurred.

The man was without shoes or socks. The right side of his body was badly lacerated and bruised, and he had been dragged along the beams for a considerable distance. His face was covered with blood, and there were a dozen or more deep cuts upon his head.

As soon as the train reached the station, the man was taken to the hospital. The police are making a search for the person who is supposed to have pushed the man onto the tracks.

The man was not unconscious, and before the ambulance arrived he had been taken to the hospital. He was found lying on the tracks, and the police are making a search for the person who is supposed to have pushed the man onto the tracks.

CONNECTICUT RIVER AGROUND

Poked Her Nose in the Soft Mud at Field's Point.

Passengers Transferred and Lost Only and an Hour's Time.

The steamer Connecticut, of the Providence and Stonington line, plying between here and Providence, R. I., went aground off Field's Point in Providence River this morning.

At the Company's office, pier 36 North River, it was learned that the Connecticut carried in the neighborhood of 200 passengers and a large cargo of freight. She left here last night and ran aground in the soft mud at the extreme edge of Field's Point, in sight of Providence.

The passengers were transferred without delay to the shore, and the vessel was in half an hour, and arrived in Boston about an hour behind the scheduled time.

There was no excitement on board and no one was injured. The Connecticut is not damaged in the slightest degree, and it is expected that she will be refloated this afternoon, after having been lighted of a portion of her freight.

The employees of the Elevated road immediately started about trying to determine how the man had got on the structure. This morning they said they had not yet decided. They were quite sure that he had not gone up by either of the tracks. One man had seen a person like him, for they would certainly have noticed a man in his bare feet.

The police have been called to the scene of the accident. They are making a search for the person who is supposed to have pushed the man onto the tracks.
